Plan for the future of your cloud business - jawplong ===== jawplong This is the main points: We're going to move from a subscription based pricing model to a usage based pricing model. We'll be able to track which servers you use, the amount of bandwidth you use, and how much data you are transmitting. With these information we can offer custom pricing to our customers based on this information. All our customers will be moved onto a new software platform. This will bring all the data and customisation that you've come to expect from us and also provide the ability to manage cloud servers and change settings on the fly. We're going to work with larger cloud providers to add redundancy and capacity. This will mean we can meet the demands that you are placing on our services. --- Iggyboo Interesting that they are trying to centralize all the billing data into a single platform though instead of the multiple formats they use now. If you take google app engine it's almost the exact same thing with the exception of the payment and what level of access they have on the backend. dave1619 I am not clear why they are trying to centralize the billing. If they're basically looking to move into an SaaS model, why would they need to centralize billing with the supplier? Doubt it's "just" moving to an SaaS model, looks more like they want to put the "SaaS part" of cloud computing on steroids. k 82157476af
